One prompt, a whole month

One message. Your agent looks through everything in your folder, plans the month, makes every post and hands you one page to review. Nothing is ever posted for you.

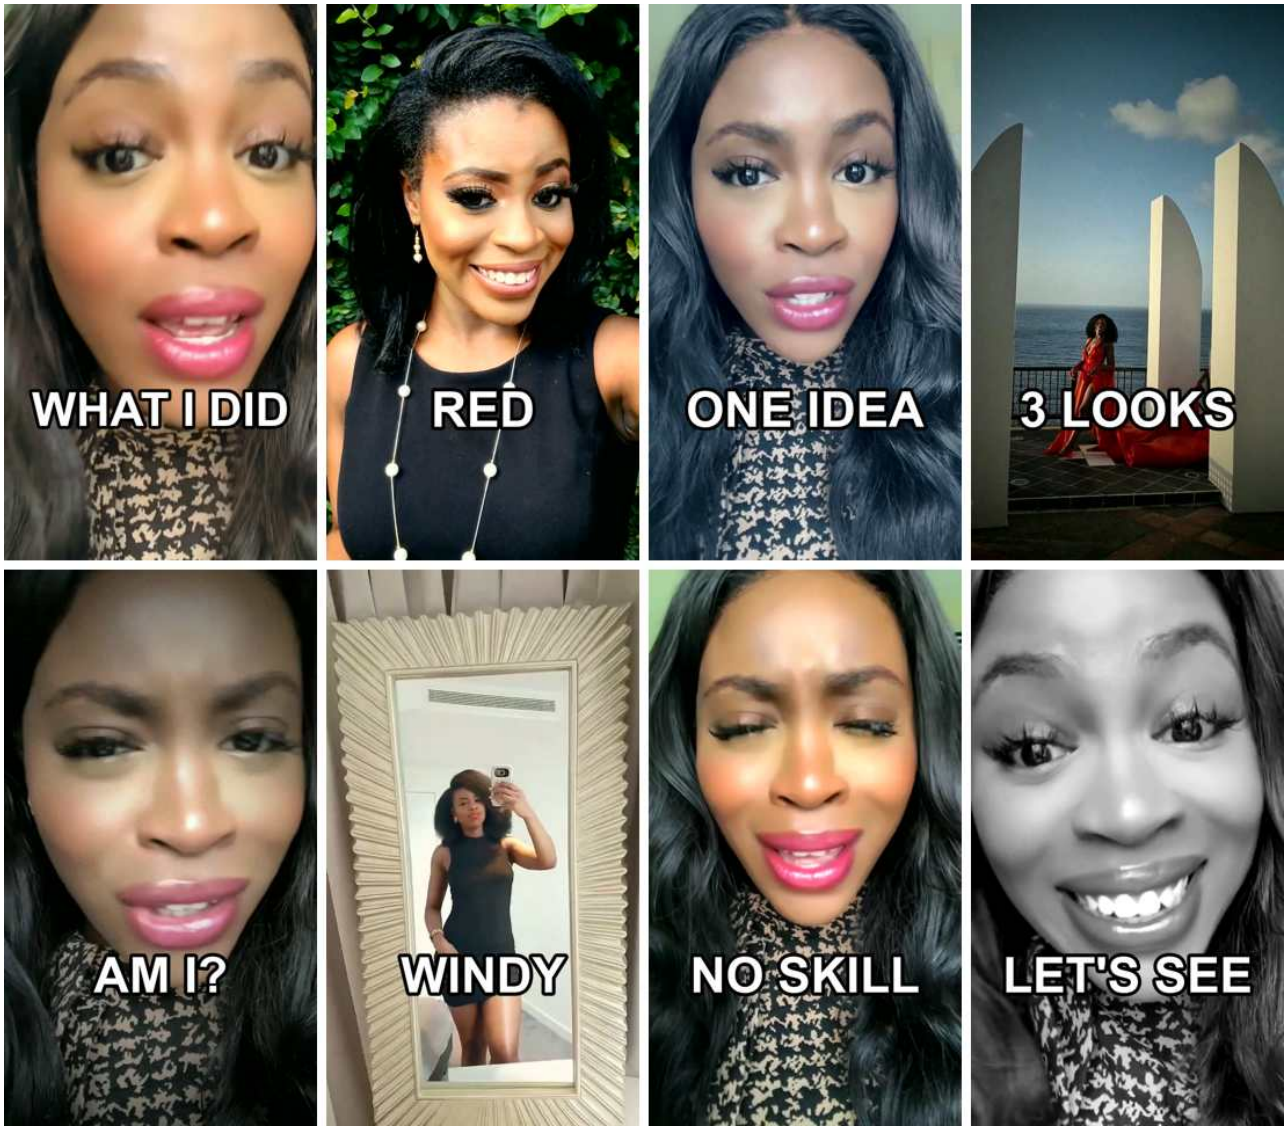

A whole month, in six moves

1. Scan
   Every clip is listed, sampled and transcribed.
2. Plan
   The best moments become a dated plan, month/plan.csv.
3. Write
   Your agent rewrites each hook, caption and cover line.
4. Make
   Every post, cover and caption is rendered and filed by week.
5. Check
   Each post is checked, and a failure is remade once.
6. Review
   You open month/index.html and watch them all.

The month prompt. Fill in the five lines in square brackets, attach this document, and send.

Edit my whole month of content in one go. Here's my context:

What I make: [for example, short recipes, or tips from my pottery studio]
Where I post: [Instagram Reels, TikTok or YouTube Shorts]
How many posts a week: [3]
My clips: [the folder they're in, such as ~/Videos/november]
How I want it to feel: [for example, calm and warm, or quick and funny]

Eight covers from the same test: a different frame and a few words for each post, with no captions in the way.

Honest expectations

- It is only as good as your footage. Your agent works from what is in the folder. It will not invent a result, a number or a scene. Ten clips will not make thirty good posts. If there is too little, you will get fewer posts and a plain note saying so.
- Time. In our test, 9 short clips, about a minute and a half of footage, took about a minute and a half to scan. Eight short posts, about a minute of finished video in all, then took about six minutes on a small laptop. Time grows with footage: expect a real month of longer clips to take from one to several hours. Leave the computer plugged in and awake. It can carry on while you do something else.
- Disk. Keep at least 5 GB free for a month of short posts, and more for a lot of phone 4K. Working files are removed as each post finishes. The batch stops by itself, with a message, if the disk is nearly full.
